The United Kingdom's exit from the European Union has significant implications for the aviation industry. Brexit has raised a number of legal questions, including the following:

- What will happen to the UK's membership in the European Common Aviation Area (ECAA)?
- What will be the impact of Brexit on the UK's bilateral air service agreements with other countries?
- What will happen to the UK's participation in the EU's Single European Sky initiative?

This article will explore these legal questions and provide an overview of the legal perspectives on Brexit and aviation law.

The UK's Membership in the ECAA

The ECAA is a single market for air transport within the EU. It allows airlines to operate freely within the EU without having to obtain separate licenses from each individual country. The ECAA also establishes common rules for safety, security, and environmental protection.

The UK's membership in the ECAA has been a major benefit to the UK aviation industry. It has allowed UK airlines to operate freely within the EU and has helped to create a level playing field for UK businesses.

Brexit will have a significant impact on the UK's membership in the ECAA. The UK will no longer be a member of the ECAA and UK airlines will no longer be able to operate freely within the EU without having to obtain separate licenses from each individual country.

The UK government has said that it is committed to maintaining close ties with the ECAA and that it will seek to negotiate a new air services agreement with the EU.

The UK's Bilateral Air Service Agreements

The UK has bilateral air service agreements with over 100 countries. These agreements allow airlines from the UK and other countries to operate flights between the two countries.

Brexit will have a significant impact on the UK's bilateral air service agreements. The UK will need to renegotiate these agreements with each individual country.

The UK government has said that it is committed to maintaining close ties with the countries that it has bilateral air service agreements with and that it will seek to negotiate new agreements that are in the best interests of the UK.

The UK's Participation in the EU's Single European Sky Initiative

The EU's Single European Sky initiative is a program to create a single, integrated air traffic management system for the EU. The goal of the initiative is to improve safety, reduce delays, and cut costs.

The UK has been a participant in the EU's Single European Sky initiative since its inception. Brexit will have a significant impact on the UK's participation in the initiative.

The UK government has said that it is committed to maintaining close ties with the EU on aviation matters and that it will seek to negotiate a new agreement that will allow the UK to continue to participate in the Single European Sky initiative.

Brexit has significant implications for the aviation industry. The UK's exit from the EU will have a major impact on the UK's membership in the ECAA, the UK's bilateral air service agreements, and the UK's participation in the EU's Single European Sky initiative.

Bilateral Air Service Agreements

- Negotiated by govts, but airlines are active lobbyists
- Inherently anti-competitive
  - But govts are equally hypocritical about it
- The cases:
  - Trans-Atlantic
  - Trans-Pacific (Australia – USA)
  - Australia inbound
  - Effects

Single European Sky

Pan-European dimension also beyond EU-27
