Description

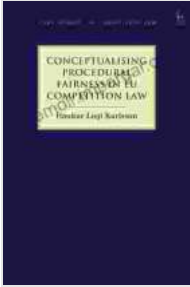

Procedural fairness is a fundamental principle of EU law. It requires that individuals and undertakings are treated fairly in the course of administrative proceedings. In the context of competition law, procedural fairness is particularly important, as competition law investigations and proceedings can have a significant impact on the rights and interests of businesses.

This book examines the concept of procedural fairness in EU competition law. It provides a comprehensive analysis of the relevant case law and literature, and offers a novel conceptual framework for understanding the role of procedural fairness in this important area of law.
