Berry argues that the traditional Christian worldview, which sees the universe as a static creation that was created by God in six days, is no longer tenable in light of modern scientific discoveries.

Instead, Berry proposes a new "cosmic Christianity" that is based on the understanding that the universe is an evolving, dynamic system that is constantly changing and growing.

This new understanding of the universe has profound implications for our understanding of God. Berry argues that God is not a static being who created the universe and then left it to its own devices.

Rather, God is a dynamic, evolving force that is constantly present in the universe and guiding its development.

Berry's cosmic Christianity is a radical new vision of the relationship between science and religion. It is a vision that is based on the belief that the universe is a sacred place that is filled with the presence of God.

This vision has the potential to transform our understanding of ourselves and our place in the universe. It is a vision that offers hope for a future in which we can live in harmony with each other and with the planet.
